

Contents

List of Tables	ix
List of Figures	x
Notes on the Contributors	xi
Introduction	1
Part I The Purchasing Power Parity and its Implications for Equilibrium Exchanges Rates
1 Three Exchange Rate Puzzles: Fact or Fiction? Ronald MacDonald	9
1.1 Introduction	9
1.2 The PPP puzzle	10
1.2.1 Testing PPP	14
1.2.2 Econometric explanations for the PPP puzzle	23
1.3 The volatility puzzle	32
1.3.1 The forward-looking monetary relationship and the magnification effect	33
1.3.2 Empirical evidence on inter- and intra-regime volatility	44
1.4 The levels puzzle and out-of-sample forecasting	46
1.5 Summary and conclusions	53
2 The Real Exchange Rate Misalignment in the Five Central European Countries – Single Equation Approach Jan Frait, Luboš Komárek and Martin Melecký	61
2.1 Introduction	61
2.2 Development and determinants of the real exchange rates	63
2.2.1 The real exchange rate developments in the new EU Member States	63

2.2.2	The fundamental factors affecting the real exchange rate	67
2.3	The equilibrium real exchange rate concepts	68
2.3.1	Methods based on an economic theory	69
2.3.2	Outline of the behavioural model for EU5 countries	70
2.4	Empirical evaluation and evidence for the EU5 countries	72
2.4.1	Empirical techniques	72
2.4.2	Misalignments of the EU5 countries' currencies	78
2.5	Conclusion	81
3	Real Equilibrium Exchange Rate in China. Is the Renminbi Undervalued?	94
	Virginie Coudert and Cécile Couharde
3.1	Introduction	94
3.2	Is the renminbi undervalued? The 'usual suspects'	95
3.3	Estimating the Balassa effect	98
3.3.1	The Balassa effect	98
3.3.2	Cross-section estimations	100
3.3.3	Panel data estimations	103
3.4	Discussion	107
3.4.1	Why is there no Balassa effect at work in China?	107
3.4.2	Comparisons with previous results	108
3.5	Conclusion	110

Part II Exchange Rates Dynamics and Pass-Through Effects

4	Exchange Rate Pass-Through Effect and Monetary Policy in Russia	115
	Victoria V. Dobrynskaya and Dmitry V. Levando
4.1	Introduction	115
4.2	Literature review	118
4.2.1	Theories of exchange rate PTE	118
4.2.2	Empirical evidence	119
4.2.3	Influence of monetary policy on PTE	121

4.3	Theoretical model	121
4.4	Empirical analysis	123
4.4.1	Data	123
4.4.2	Methodology and results	125
4.2.3	Influence of monetary policy on PTE	132
4.5	Conclusion	135
5	Disaggregated Econometric Models to Forecast Inflation in Hungary	139
	Viktor Várpalotai
5.1	Introduction	139
5.2	Inflation forecasting models used by the MNB	140
5.3	The disaggregated cost pass-through based inflation forecasting model	142
5.3.1	Framework of the model	142
5.3.2	Econometric issues: Distributed lag estimator derived from smoothness priors	149
5.4	Empirical results and the predictive accuracy of the model	150
5.5	Conclusions	153

Part III Exchange Rates Dynamics and Structural Shocks on Economies

6	An Open Economy Dynamic General Equilibrium Model Linking the Euro Area and the US Economy	169
	Gregory de Walque and Raf Wouters
6.1	Introduction	169
6.2	Model description	172
6.2.1	Households	172
6.2.2	The firms and price setting	176
6.2.3	Balance of payments	182
6.2.4	Market equilibrium	182
6.2.5	The US economy and the rest of the world	183
6.2.6	The monetary policy	184
6.2.7	Structural shocks summary	184
6.3	Data and estimation	185
6.4	Impulse response functions for the shocks	191
6.4.1	Productivity shocks	191

6.4.2	Domestic demand shocks	201
6.4.3	Monetary policy shocks	201
6.4.4	Oil shocks	204
6.4.5	Uncovered interest rate parity shock to the exchange rate	209
6.4.6	ROW shocks	209
6.5	Model validation by summary statistics	210
6.6	The unconditional variance decomposition of the forecast errors	214
6.7	Conclusion	223
7	Liberalisation Shocks and Real Exchange Rates Appreciation in the Transition Economies Christos Papazoglou	227
7.1	Introduction	227
7.2	The model	229
7.3	The general solution of the system	233
7.4	Increase in core inflation	235
7.5	Decrease in the demand for money	237
7.6	Conclusions	239
	Index	243

Introduction

Pavlos Karadeloglou¹ and Virginie Terraza²

The impact of exchange rate movements on prices and economic activity is in the core of international macroeconomic theory and policy. More recently, the interest in this issue has resurged following the rather strong exchange rate fluctuations, the unsustainability of the current account imbalances and the anticipated shifts in exchange rate regimes in some emerging economies. The classical international macroeconomic theory teaches that currency depreciations are expansionary while the opposite is true for domestic currency appreciations. However, factors like degree of trade openness, the market structure, the geographical composition of trade, the importance of intra-firm trade and the macroeconomic and institutional environment influence on the degree and intensity of the impacts.

Exchange rate models developed in the years following the fall of Bretton Woods were based on the assumption that exchange rate developments closely follow movements of fundamentals and that their movements matter. The price-competitiveness-channel together with import and consumer price developments are certainly obvious transmission mechanisms of the exchange rate developments to the macroeconomy, as swings in the nominal effective exchange rate affect relative costs and prices with a subsequent impact on export performance and thus activity. Recently the profession has made considerable progress, pursuing several new routes in an attempt to narrow down the still wide uncertainty about the size of the impacts. At the same time, one of the main directions in the empirical research in economics was to quantify the role of exchange rates in moderating the impact of economic disturbances.

When considering the factors determining exchange rate movements a familiar starting point is the theory of (relative) purchasing power parity (PPP), according to which the inflation differential at home and abroad is reflected in a corresponding change in the nominal exchange rate. Following the provocative paper by Obstfeld and Rogoff in 2000 about 'Risk and Exchange Rates' published in the NBER Working Paper No. 6694, where six key puzzles in International Finance related to transaction costs were identified, a large and vibrant literature seeking to establish if indeed transaction costs explain the puzzles was generated.

The first part of the book, deals with the PPP persistence puzzle, with econometric aspects of the exchange rates dynamics and its implications and the misalignment on equilibrium exchange rates. In chapter 1, R. MacDonald examines two of the puzzles addressed in Obstfeld and Rogoff, namely the PPP puzzle and the exchange rate disconnect. He argues that the latter actually has two puzzles subsumed within it, what he refers to as the levels and volatility puzzles. Hence, in total, he explores three puzzles in this paper, namely the PPP puzzle, and what we have referred to as the levels and volatility puzzles, and seeks to provide an explanation for these puzzles. He argues that the PPP Puzzle – the combination of a high volatility of real and nominal exchange rates with the slow mean reversion of real exchange rates – can be explained in a number of ways, from product and time aggregation biases to pricing to market, non-linear adjustment, real factors and imperfectly substitutable goods, with the preferred explanation for the PPP puzzle being a combination of pricing to market and real factors, such as the effects of productivity differentials on exchange rates. This conclusion has clear implications for the measurement of equilibrium values of currencies. The levels puzzle concerns the supposed poor out-of-sample forecasting properties of exchange rate models and, in particular, the findings of Meese and Rogoff (1983) that fundamentals-based models cannot outperform a random walk. He argues in this paper that the random walk paradigm can be convincingly overturned at horizons as short as two months, and this seems a robust result. The key to overturning this result is the use of econometric methods, which capture the underlying data dynamics and the long-run relationships. The volatility puzzle concerns the apparent excessive volatility of exchange rates in flexible rate regimes – intra regime volatility – and the sharp rise in both real and nominal exchange rate volatility in the move from fixed to floating exchange rates – inter-regime volatility. In this paper he argues that excessive exchange rate volatility is entirely consistent with a number of forward-looking exchange rate models and in fact the empirical evidence suggests that intra-regime volatility may be something of a chimera. He also claims that the issue of inter regime volatility may also be overplayed since once the role of distortions are recognised in fixed rate regimes fundamentals become more volatile. He concludes that although there are still a number of puzzles in the exchange rate literature the three key puzzles considered in this paper have been resolved.

To determine whether the real exchange rate is misaligned with respect to its long-run equilibrium is an important issue for policy makers. In particular, the potential misalignment (which is the difference between the ‘equilibrium exchange rate’ consistent with macroeconomic fundamentals and the observed exchange rates) is one of the most important policy issues faced by the new EU Member States in view of their future adoption of the euro and with the big challenge being the participation in the exchange rate mechanism. In chapter 2, Jan Frait, Luboš Komárek and Martin Melecký focus on the development of real exchange rates and its determinants in five new EU Member States namely the Czech Republic, Hungary, Poland, Slovakia, and Slovenia. They provide the long-term trends leading to real exchange rate appreciation, pointing to the differences in the individual countries as well as a survey of existing empirical literature on the real exchange rates in transitional countries. Using the purely statistical (Hodrick-Prescott and Band-Pass filter) as well as the BEER-like approaches, which were estimated by two single equation techniques (Engle-Granger and ARDL), they conclude that the real exchange rates have generally evolved in line with the determinants that are believed to be fundamental. The differences among the individual countries can sometimes be explained by different development of their fundamentals.

The question related to the misalignment or not of the Chinese exchange rate has been a topical issue in the discussion of international fora as many analysts argue that this may be a solution for the correction of global imbalances. Virginie Coudert and Cécile Couharde (Chapter 3) investigate the size of a possible misalignment in the Chinese real exchange rate. To do so they investigate the trend of several economic indicators that show some signs of undervaluation of the real exchange rate of the renminbi during the recent years: real effective exchange rate depreciation, surging foreign exchange reserves, current account surpluses. Second, they use cross-section regressions relating the real exchange rate to a 'Balassa effect', on different samples of countries. Third they address the issue of the 'Balassa effect' in the framework of a BEER approach using panel-data estimations. The econometric estimates confirm the trend of the stylised facts about the undervaluation for the Chinese renminbi.

In the second part of the book the importance of exchange rates dynamics in the pass-through effects (PTE) is examined. In chapter 4, Victoria V. Dobrynskaya and Dmitry V. Levando propose an analysis of PTE on consumer prices of different categories of goods and producer prices in different industries in Russia taking into account links between monetary policy and exchange rate regimes. They address the question whether the monetary policy in Russia counteracts exchange rate changes and reduces pass-through. Using an empirical approach, they test if PTE: 1) is incomplete in the short run and long run; 2) is different for consumer and producer prices; 3) is different for the components of CPI (food, goods and services) and the components of PPI (export- and domestic market-oriented industries) and if monetary policy decreases PTE. They conclude that PTE on all prices is incomplete even in the long run and that PTE on consumer prices is higher than PTE in developed countries. Furthermore, prices of food and goods are highly exchange rate elastic while prices of services do not react to exchange rate changes. This characterises Russia as a small economy, which is highly dependent on shocks in the world markets.

In chapter 5, the importance of exchange rate analysis and its impact on the economy is demonstrated in an inflation-targeting context adopted by the Hungarian Central Bank since June 2001. The main important issue in such a policy context is the exchange rate pass-through. This is a major focus of interest for policymakers and academics. The former are primarily interested in the extent and timing of ERPT as a key ingredient of their forecasting models of prices and of the trade balance. Along with academics, they are also interested in the role of ERPT in understanding the mechanisms of international price adjustment, e.g. in reconciling the observation that the relative stability of import prices does not reflect the high volatility of nominal exchange rates with economic theory. Evidence of 'disconnect' between exchange rates and prices would also imply a greater degree of insulation and thus greater effectiveness of monetary policy. V. Varpalotai presents an inflation-forecasting model using an approach which is new not only in Hungary but also in the relevant literature. This model is based on disaggregated econometric estimates with special interest on slow price adjustment which are complemented by expert assumptions in a unified framework. The model delivers forecasts of the prices of marketed goods included in the CPI basket by describing the gradual process when costs gradually pass-through to consumer prices. Actually, it is the empirical estimation of this slow cost pass-through process that provides the novelty of the model in terms of economics and econometrics. By considering wages, foreign prices, exchange rate, transportation costs and energy prices the model contributes in answering two questions: (1) How do prices change following changes in the prices of their cost factors? (2) What happens during the transitory period when changes in costs and prices separate?

The third part of the book deals with econometric aspects of the exchange rates dynamics linked to structural shocks on different economies. The contribution of the dynamic stochastic general equilibrium (DSGE) model is used by G. de Walque and R. Wouters to analyse the existing linkages between the United States and the euro area. They try to empirically estimate a New Open Economy Model to analyse the behaviour of the exchange rate and the current account between the two economies. They use a Bayesian full information approach to estimate the model; the latter is used to evaluate the impulse response functions for different shocks (productivity shocks domestic demand and monetary policy shocks). Their results confirm that positive productivity shocks and declining mark-ups, or the typical characteristics of the new economy, are unable to explain a major appreciation of the exchange rate. Although in its present state, the model has clearly some problems to replicate the observed international synchronisation in the cyclical output and aggregate demand components, it remains a topic for further research to analyse how much of the observed correlation between the output of the two major economies can be explained once we allow for a positive correlation between the domestic shocks that hit the two economies (which are assumed to be orthogonal in the estimation approach up to now). In particular, they can identify the major sources of exchange rate and current account developments. Finally the main findings suggest that shocks issued from the uncovered real interest parity seem to be important to explain the short run volatility in exchange rates, while fundamental shocks explain the long run swings.

In chapter 7, a dynamic macroeconomic model is used to study the impact of liberalisation on the behaviour of the real exchange rate in a representative transition economy operating under a flexible exchange rate regime. Christos Papazoglou identifies the role of liberalisation in the emergence of the stylised fact concerning the behaviour of the real exchange rate at the early stages of transformation of the transition economies. The analysis considers the impact of two specific shocks related to liberalisation. The first refers to an increase in the core inflation while the second analyses a shock on the financial sector, under a fall in the demand for money. The results are affected by two assumptions reflecting the particularity of transition economies: The particular shocks on domestic inflation are increased due to the observation that the private sector does not extend over the entire economy. The second concerns the underdevelopment of the domestic financial sector, which diminishes the impact of the two disturbances on the rate of exchange depreciation. As a result of these two specific features the possibility of real appreciation during the adjustment process increases. The particular disturbance impacts more on the inflation rate than on the exchange depreciation rate in the short run and generates the necessary adjustment mechanism that brings the system towards the new long run equilibrium.

Notes

1. European Central Bank.
2. LSF, University of Luxembourg.

Index

- Balassa effect, 4, 95, 98, 100, 102, 106, 107, 109, 110
- Balassa-Samuelson effect, 26, 27, 53, 68, 82, 89, 98, 111, 141
- Band-Pass filter, 3, 63, 72, 73, 74, 81, 90
- Bayesian Estimation, 170, 225
- BEER, 3, 63, 69, 70, 72, 73, 75, 76, 77, 90, 91, 95, 109, 110, 111
- BEER approach, 4, 62, 108, 109, 110
- business cycle, 55, 90, 211, 214, 226
- Calvo pricing, 179
- Central and Eastern Europe, 90, 91, 111, 227
- co-integration, 14, 15, 70, 72, 78, 79, 80, 87, 92, 95, 98, 105, 106, 107, 125, 127, 129, 130, 133, 134, 164
- competitiveness, 1, 61, 90, 92, 95, 98, 241, 242
- consumer price, 1, 4, 5, 82, 88, 96, 104, 117, 118, 119, 123, 126, 127, 128, 129, 132, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 142, 143, 145, 147, 152, 154, 164, 165, 179, 182, 192, 209, 216
- core inflation, 6, 228, 229, 230, 235, 236, 240
- cost factors, 5, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 150, 155, 157, 159, 161, 163, 165
- cost pass-through, 5, 140, 142, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 150, 151, 153, 166
- cross-section estimations, 95, 98, 100, 109
- Czech Republic, 62, 63, 65, 66, 73, 79, 81, 85, 88, 104, 106, 108, 164, 228
- distributed lag, 92, 140, 149, 150, 166
- DSGE, 5, 170, 210, 225, 226
- Dynamic General Equilibrium model, 169
- equilibrium exchange rate, 2, 3, 11, 12, 32, 62, 68, 69, 70, 78, 79, 80, 81, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 97, 99, 101, 103, 105, 107, 108, 109, 111, 112, 225, 240, 242
- equilibrium real exchange rate, 61, 62, 67, 68, 70, 78, 90, 91, 228, 241
- ERDI, 64, 66, 81
- ERM II, 62, 68, 81, 90
- error correction, 49, 52, 53, 77, 79, 80, 81, 117, 125, 141, 142, 146, 148, 149, 150
- exchange rate appreciation, 3, 38, 61, 62, 63, 67, 82, 200, 228, 235, 236, 239, 240
- exchange rate depreciation, 4, 63, 95, 110, 200, 209, 227, 236, 237, 239
- exchange rate forecasting, 53, 58
- exchange rate pass-through, 4, 115, 117, 118, 119, 121, 123, 125, 127, 129, 131, 133, 135, 137, 138, 142, 143, 166, 225, 226
- exchange rate regime, 1, 4, 6, 33, 38, 40, 56, 57, 80, 86, 88, 89, 94, 112, 116, 227, 228, 231
- fanchart, 140
- FEER approach, 69, 108, 109
- financial liberalization, 228, 239
- foreign direct investment, 67, 79, 80, 83, 88
- forward looking monetary model, 37, 43

- half-life, 10, 11, 17, 22, 23, 151
Hodrick-Prescott filter, 3, 63, 72, 73, 78, 81
Hungary, 3, 5, 62, 65, 66, 74, 79, 81, 83, 85, 88, 90, 104, 106, 108, 129, 139, 141, 143, 145, 147, 149, 151, 153, 157, 159, 161, 163, 164, 165, 166, 228
- inflation differential, 2, 64, 65, 88 inflation forecast, 5, 139, 140, 141, 142, 153, 154, 164, 165, 166 inflation targeting, 4, 139, 164, 166 inter-regime volatility, 3, 32, 44, 46, 54
- levels puzzle, 2, 10, 46, 53, 54
- Marshall-Lerner condition, 196
misalignment, 2, 3, 61, 62, 63, 67, 69, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 85, 89, 91, 92, 93, 95, 100, 101, 102, 103, 107, 108, 110 monetary policy, 4, 5, 59, 92, 112, 115, 116, 117, 118, 120, 121, 122, 123, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 139, 146, 169, 170, 171, 183, 184, 195, 201, 203, 204, 221, 222, 225, 226, 232, 241
- N.E.M. model, 141, 165
net foreign assets, 32, 67, 68, 79, 80, 81, 83, 88, 89, 109, 110, 170 new Open Economy Model, 5, 29, 169, 225
NOEM, 37, 38, 40, 41, 43, 169, 170, 171, 191, 214, 223
- Openness, 1, 15, 20, 67, 68, 79, 80, 83, 88, 185, 226
overvalued currency, 62, 81
- panel co-integration test, 105, 106
panel unit root tests, 105, 106
- pass-through, 4, 5, 28, 29, 30, 31, 41, 56, 113, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 123, 125, 127, 129, 130, 131, 133, 134, 135, 137, 138, 140, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 153, 154, 166, 170, 180, 181, 185, 190, 197, 204, 225, 226
- Poland, 3, 62, 65, 66, 75, 79, 80, 81, 85, 88, 104, 106, 108, 126, 164, 228
- PPP puzzle, 2, 9, 10, 12, 22, 23, 25, 28, 32, 53, 54
- price liberalization, 230, 235, 239
pricing to market, 2, 28, 29, 31, 40, 43, 54, 55, 58, 59, 120, 136, 137, 190
- Productivity differential, 2, 27, 32, 54, 67, 79, 80, 81, 82, 88, 100
- Purchasing Power Parity (PPP), 2, 7, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 69, 90, 97, 98, 111, 118, 128, 135, 141
- Quarterly Report on Inflation, 140
- real effective exchange rate, 4, 85, 95, 97, 98, 108, 109, 110, 228
real exchange rate, 2, 3, 4, 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 32, 33, 38, 39, 41, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 61, 62, 63, 64, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 103, 107, 110, 111, 116, 130, 137, 169, 171, 192, 195, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 219, 220, 222, 223, 225, 227, 228, 229, 231, 232, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242
- real interest rate differential, 45, 67, 70, 72, 83, 231

- relative price of non-traded to traded goods, 13, 21, 23, 27
- renminbi, 4, 94, 95, 96, 97, 107, 109, 110, 112
- risk premium, 37, 38, 39, 40, 43, 45, 71, 171, 174, 201
- root mean square error criteria, 47, 49, 52
- Russia, 4, 80, 86, 88, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 121, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 131, 133, 135, 136, 137, 228
- Slovakia, 3, 62, 65, 66, 76, 80, 81, 85, 88, 104, 106, 108, 165, 169, 228
- Slovenia, 3, 62, 65, 66, 77, 80, 81, 83, 85, 88, 104, 106, 108, 164, 165
- smoothness priors, 149, 166
- spillover, 144, 145, 147, 164, 172, 200, 201, 211, 221, 223
- structural reform, 228
- Structural shocks, 5, 167, 184, 221, 223
- substitution elasticity, 170, 171, 185, 190, 191, 196, 197, 209, 210, 211
- Taylor reaction rule, 184
- terms of trade, 56, 57, 68, 79, 80, 83, 88, 89, 179, 192, 195, 196, 197, 200, 201, 204, 209, 211, 214, 221
- tests of PPP, 14, 15, 56
- transition economies, 6, 68, 69, 91, 92, 227, 237, 239, 241, 242
- uncovered interest rate parity, 169, 172, 175, 185, 209, 214
- undervaluation, 4, 64, 66, 94, 95, 96, 97, 103, 108, 109, 110
- undervalued currency, 62
- volatility puzzle, 2, 9, 10, 32, 53, 54

